Academic Integrity and Plagiarism

Plagiarism and cheating on exams, assignments, projects, etc., are antithetical to academic integrity and will not be tolerated. Furthermore, not only is plagiarism simply dishonest, it is illegal in the sense that you are stealing another person's intellectual property. Therefore, plagiarism and other forms of cheating are serious offenses, not only to academia in general, but to your own education as well. Students can fail this course if caught plagiarizing or cheating on course work and/or exams. All material which is derived from other sources (including paraphrased statements, ideas, and direct quotations) must be cited, with in the text of the paper, and/or using an accepted form of footnotes, endnotes, or parenthetical citations as required.

Examples of Academic Dishonesty:

Cheating – Using or attempting to use unauthorized materials for one's own academic benefit.

Plagiarism – Intentionally or unintentionally presenting as one's own words the ideas, words, or information of another without citing the reference, using either Modern Language Association (MLA), American Psychological Association (APA), or other guidelines as determined by your instructor.

Reusing an assignment – Using an assignment previously submitted to another instructor without prior approval from both instructors.

Fabrication/falsification – Inventing or knowingly altering information or research.

Facilitating academic misconduct – Assisting another in committing actions considered academically dishonest.

Be forewarned that I reserve the right to turn any case of academic dishonesty (cheating on an exam or plagiarism) over to the Academic Dean for appropriate sanctions. If you are not familiar with the exact definition and/or everything that constitutes plagiarism, it is your responsibility to seek out this information well in advance of completing a course assignment or exam.

Student consequences for academic dishonesty in this course will range from a failing grade for an assignment to a failing grade for the course.

M State Policies and Procedures
